Southwest Corridor Development Plan

The Southwest Corridor must be a place where people can live, work, and do business. Thus in the first place it must be a place where people can live. The project will help provide jobs, and will encourage and create the kind of development that will result in a place where people can live. This requires a careful planning and review process. The project will not only create new employment, but also provide opportunities for better living. The people who live in the Southwest Corridor must be provided with opportunities to improve their living conditions and the quality of their lives.

Construction in the Corridor will provide work for 10,000 people. Phoenix, which has never been a city of 10,000 people before, is now the home of 10,000 people. New housing, schools, hospitals, and recreational facilities will make the Southwest Corridor one of the most vital parts of the city. Over $500 million will be spent on the Corridor's new home, and this will be a part of the city's future.

The U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development has provided $547 million to the Southwest Corridor. Additional funding will come from the city, state, and federal governments, as well as the private sector. Businesses and industry are starting to make use of the Corridor's new location, and are moving operations here and good laborers. Many commercial establishments are expected to help with development.

The Southwest Corridor Development Plan looks to the future. It is a place where people have always wanted to live. On January 1, 1973, construction started on the $10 million project. On March 16, 1975, the Corridor officially opened. The people of Phoenix are now realizing the dream of their ancestors.
